sea level; in the altimeter data this is the Labrador Sea, while in the model it is the Irminger Sea and the Greenland-Norwegian Sea 348 Levermann et al.: Dynamic sea level changes following changes in the thermohaline circulation sea level variability, they found that 37–46% of sea level variance can be explained by the NAO index, but the zonal geostrophic wind explains 84–89% of the variance of sea level on interannual time scales.

Influence of Atmospheric Circulation on the Baltic Sea

The model successfully simulates sea-level changes and baroclinic circulation/mixing features with forcing specified for a selected year. The results suggest that the seasonal cycle of wind stress is crucial in producing basin circulation. Seasonal cycle of sea surface currents presents three

Relative sea level (RSL) rise in this century will vary along U.S. coastlines due, in part, to changes in Earth's gravitational field and rotation from melting of land ice, changes in ocean circulation, and ver-

This study demonstrates that significant sea level trend and variability can also be generated by eddy momentum flux forcing due to time-varying instability of the background oceanic circulation.
